

- In preparing to write this coursework and to develop this professional awareness you are advised to ask yourself the following questions
  - a) What was I thinking and feeling?
  - b) What assumptions (professional, social or ethical) have I made about the use of this outcome measure and management of this client group or my understanding in relation to the topic being reviewed?
  - c) What did I know/ think prior to this episode?
  - d) Were thoughts/beliefs/knowledge and understanding supported by this review?
  - e) What is challenging to my existing knowledge, beliefs, and assumptions about this new information?
- If the information challenged my perceptions why was that?
  - a) Should I have known what I found?
  - b) If I did not, why not? If I did how did this make me feel
  - c) What other action(s) could I have taken that may have been more helpful to guide my learning?
  - d) How has my learning from this incident and its analysis changed my practice?
  - e) How will I apply this learning to future practice?
- This coursework is an expression of your own experiences, belief's, values etc not someone else's ideas and philosophies. It is therefore recommended that you write this critical analysis in the first person.
- Source material to support the critical reflection must be referenced. This section should be approximately 1000 words.

NB the above list of questions is a guide to help your analysis only. They should not be answered in a systematic fashion.

Do not exceed the 3000 Word count
